PRESIDENT'S CORNER

What good is photography? If photography didn't exist, how would our lives, our world be different? What good can you do with photography? How does it help you and others?

Photography has been around for almost 200 years. The technology has changed, but the idea is the same. Photography is the process of capturing light in the form of visual images. Before photography, people had to use the arts of painting or sculpture to create a physical object that is a visual representation of a person or thing. The technology of photography has moved from film and chemical processes to digital and electronic processes. It has become more convenient, but something may be lost.

So, photography is a way of documenting what we see. I know what my great-great grandparents, Alfred and Anna Wood, look like because I have a picture of them from over 100 years ago. The past was preserved in the photo. Before then, a skilled painter was needed to do a portrait, but as photography became more accessible to people, we see what life was like to the average person back then. That is one of the reasons I enjoy photographing family and family events.

Thinking of preserving the past, we have historical photos that give us a picture (pun intended) the great events of history, going back to the Civil War. So, our society is enriched by seeing and understanding our history.

Almost everyone today has some type of camera. We share photos of people and events on social media. Over time, some photos may be preserved, but I am afraid, that 25, 50 or 100 years from now, many will be gone. This is because many electronic images are not backed up or printed. Then they are lost, not being saved as a physical object such as a print or negative.

At the Duneland Photography Club, we not only help each other learn how to take photos and capture worthy images, but we teach selecting, printing, exhibiting, and preserving photos that can stand the test of time.

Steve Bensing,
President

MARCH MEETING RECAP

Steve Bensing welcomed new members and visitors. He also read the thankyou card that Christine sent thanking the club for letting her speak at our meeting in January.

Program Speaker for the meeting was Dave Lasayko. The topic was Salt Printing With Digital Negatives: Bringing the 19th Century into the 21st Century with Photography. In Dave's presentation we watched a video of a photographer going through the process of taking a photo and developing it using the salt formula method to create a portrait that had the 19th Century look. Dave gave us information on the supplies we would need and showed us an example he had done with a photo he had taken of Steve with his digital camera. He then took the image and made a negative he could develop with the salt and albumen method. The process is quite technical and very fascinating!

Show and Tell theme was Before and After Editing

Many Members participated in tonight's "Show and Tell" including- Carol Estes, Peggy Carter, Steve Bensing, Greg Stephan, Paul Ewing, Matt Kowalski, Terry Fairchild, and Patrice Lawson.
